Candidatul ideal

Semaphore is seeking a talented Technical Writer to own the creation and publication of customer-facing product guides and documentation and contribute to our technical blog.

You'll write for developers and DevOps engineers, and your work will play a vital role in getting customers up and running quickly. Ideally, you have both a technical background that enables you to develop examples and a demonstrated ability to deliver high-quality technical documentation that helps customers.

This is a remote position and you should thrive in asynchronous communication. We expect you to be able to develop working relationships with coworkers from around the globe.

You'll collaborate with many teams and continuously use customer feedback to improve Semaphore content.

A bootstrapped product company

Technical Writer in SEMAPHORE CI
Our story began in 2009 when Marko Anastasov and Darko Fabijan, two friends from university, set up the company while working at the same time on their social web startup and for clients. From the beginning, we were passionate about both making software and the effects great products have on people. We have combined those in creating Semaphore, which we launched in 2012, and transitioned to become a product company. Now that we are responsible for a service used in over 100 countries, we feel like we're only getting started.

Doing the right thing

Over the years we have grown in all aspects — and continue to every day — but our goals have remained the same. Have fun while working with the best technology at hand. Design and create the finest product we can. Compete with the top in the industry. Learn from the best. Focus on the essential. Cultivate openness and respect in all communication. Be friends with one another. Learn constantly. Share what we know.
